Aides Explain Reagan Views on Atomic War in Europe

GLENEAGLES, Scouland — Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger led U.S. efforts Tuesday to put down a futor over remarks by President Reagan about a restricted nuclear war, declaring there were no differences on nuclear strategy between Washington and its European allies.

There is no change whatsoever in any of the strategies of NATO and the United States," he said at a hastily called news conference.

Mr. Weinberger was in this Scottish highland re-sort with other defense chiefs of the Western military alliance for a two-day meeting of NATO's nuclear planning group.

As ministers assembled, the controversy grew over President Reagan's remarks to newspaper edi-tors Priday in Washington, Mr. Reagan told a ques-tioner, "I could see where you could have the ex-change of tactical weapons against troops in the field without it bringing either one of the major powers to pushing the button."

Mr. Reagan said an exchange of battlefield nuclear weapons between West and East could be limited if Western and Soviet forces were balanced to the point of a "stalemate."

Mr. Reagan's remarks were little noticed in the United States, but they startled a West German audience that is particularly sensitive to nuclear weapon issues and not fully familiar with the thinking behind official nuclear doctrine. There has been a growing movement in several countries to prevent the stationing of new nuclear arms in Western Eu-

At Gleneagles, Defense Secretary John Nott of Britain said there was "nothing new or controversial" in Mr. Reagan's statement.

Reacting to another Reagan statement in the Fri-day meeting, President Leonid I. Brezhnev of the Soviet Union rejected President Reagan's claim that the Russians believed they could win a nuclear war. Mr. Brezhnev suggested that the U.S. leader make a public statement declaring nuclear attack a

But the West German party officials said many Americans did not understand fears among Euro-are of a limited nuclear war. President Reagan was helping to "fuel this fear with remarks on the possi-bility of a limited exchange with tactical atomic weapons," said Karsten Voigt, a party specialist on disarmament. The Social Democratic Party's floor leader, Herbert Wehner, said the Bonn government should seek clarification of Mr. Reagan's remarks and make its own views on the issue clear.

A spokesman for Defense Minister Hans Apel of West Germany said he was satisfied that Mr. Reagan's remarks did not constitute a change in U.S. policy. "It is not true that President Reagan has said 'yes' to the possibility of limited nuclear in Europe," the spokesman said. Mr. Apel is convinced that U.S. commitments to Europe have not changed, the spokesman said.

Some European politicians and commentators had interpreted Mr. Reagan's remarks as the United States' envisaging the possibility of a limited nuclear conflict with the Soviet Union in Europe.

The controversy has erupted as European governments try to combat growing opposition to nuclear weapons in a campaign aimed specifically at medium-range nuclear missiles that NATO wants to deploy.

Anti-nuclear sentiment is strong in West Germany, Britain, Italy, Belgium and the Netherlands, where the Cruise and Pershing-2 missiles are to be deployed.

France Holds Up Sale Of Gas Gear to Russia

By Joseph Firchett

PARIS - The French government is holding up a major sale of computerized equipment to the So-viet Union for the Siberia-Europe natural gas pipeline in what offi-cials see as the first test of a drive by President François Mitterrand's government to tighten up controls on strategically sensitive exports. Involved is the proposed sale by Thomson-CSF of computerized pipeline surveillance equipment. The deal could be worth $600 million in stages over 10 years, according to press reports, which de-scribed it as a record French sale in this sector.

Plant for a better-policed export policy, which is still being debated in the government, coincides with a campaign by the Reagan administration to align NATO allies, Ja pan and neutral industrial countries behind a more rigorous approach to high-technology exports to the Soviet Union or to certain Third World countries that might use them against the West.

The tougher French scrutiny of East-bloc exports - in contrast to past liberalism in export sales underscores the Mitterrand and Reagan administrations similar outlook on Western security.

A press campaign in favor of the sale has begun, accusing External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson of seeking to "please the Americans" and pointing out that the United States continues to sell grain and other goods to the Soviet Union while preaching restraint to its allies.

The Reagan administration op-poses the Thomson sale as, in a U.S. official's words, "a double bone in our throat" because of Washington's opposition to the pipeline itself and because the computerized surveillance equipment is regarded as technology that the Soviet Union would have difficulty producing without West-

While several U.S. officials said they were "delighted" to hear of the French review of the proposed sale, all disclaimed any advance knowledge of the decision. The news emerged in French newspa-pers this week, apparently as a re-sult of leaks from opponents of the government's plans.

France — along with West Germany, Italy, Austria and other Enropean countries — appears deter-mined to ignore persistent U.S. criticism of the pipeline itself. While part of a separate deal, the equipment, which would eventually control gas flow throughout the planned Soviet network, would be a major French item in the European industrial sales designed to offset the cost of the Soviet gas. However, France's new Socialist government appears disposed to adopt a more restrictive approach to trade, officials said. The Socialists are critical of policy trends in the Soviet Union and they have

U.S. Agency Outlines Private Sector's Role In New Aid Program

By Barbara Crossette New York Tunes Service WASHINGTON — The Reagan administratioo has outlined how it intends to give private enterprise a larger role in U.S. foreign aid.

Following Mr. Reagan's poli-cies, Mr. McPherson said, the agency will be using its foreign assistance funds for specific, seed-capital, job-generating projects aimed at helping the Third World private sector help itself. United Press International BEIRUT — A political leader of the Iranian-backed Shiite Al Amal organization was shot to death by unidentified gunmen Tuesday in a vegetable market in predominently Moslem West Beirut, a spokesman for the group said.

Nabih Berri, the mili-tary and political commander of Al Amal, said the motives for the assa-sination were "policial." At the beginning of the interview, Mr. Mubarak was asked if Mr. Mubarak was relaxed and there was a conspiracy surround-ing the killing of Sadat.

"The investigation didn't finish yet," he replied, "but I could give a just a very brief idea. Some extremists here, some fanatics, may-be Moslem fanatics — these peo-ple are just trying to imitate some-thing like what happened in Iran."

"They planned to assassinate the president, maybe the whole leadership, at the celebration on the sixth of October," he said, "then to declare something like the so-called Islamic revolution."

Referring to a government an-nouncement issued here Sunday night that said that 230 members of a "terrorist religious group," presumably Takfir wa-Hijra, had been arrested, Mr. Mubarak said:

Asked how many arrests had been made overall, the president said "until the investigation is finished I can't tell you exactly. But it is all internal. It is not supported by any foreign, as far as I know until now, any foreign countries."

He said the arrests had resulted in part from interrogations of four suspects seized at the parade grounds. He said that be and Sadat were aware of plotters "before the trip of President Sadat to Mansoura." On Sept. 26, Sadat, against the advice of security officials, waded through throngs and dedicated a fertilizer plant in the industrial town of Mansoura.

Zoumr was in military intelligence, Mr. Mubarak said, "He was not in military intelligence, but intelligence was supervising him — it's part of reconnaissance."

Mr. Mubarak said "not at all," when asked whether Sadat had overreacted in September when he arrested more than 1,500 religious extremists and political opponents.

"If he didn't do it, it would have been much more serious the day of the assassination," he said, adding, Some of those arrested on the fifth of September were partners in this act."
Mr. Mnbarak said he spoke with and wealth threatens to be another depressing case of politicians talking past each other. Most of the gathered presidents and prime ministers will speak in terms of their respective national experiences, and will be much exasperated when half the audience misunderstands them. President Reagan illustrated the possibilities last week when he adjured the poor countries to put their trust in free markets.

After all, look at the American example. "Few countries are less developed than we were when the original settlers arrived here," he observed. "They faced a wilderness where poverty was their daily lot and danger and starvation their close companions."

But those settlers also faced the planet's greatest reserve of first-class agricultural land, with a mild climate and phenomenally reliable rainfall. Americans rarely reflect that North America is the only continent whose people have not been repeatedly subjected to famine, and whose cities have never known bread riots. Free markets had a lot to do with the increase in American prosperity. But it is at least equally true that the stable and rapid increase of prosperity had a lot to do with the development of American freedoms.

In the Third World, where many countries have only two or three significant exports, the free market means the roller coaster of international commodity prices. Life is good when tin, or copper, or coffee is high - and then the economy goes into paralysis when it

The Cancun conference on world poverty falls. That is why Third World governments keep bringing up ideas for worldwide price stabilization schemes. The industrial countries reply that those schemes can't possibly work. That is correct, unfortunately, but it leaves people in the poor countries to the south with an impression that the principles of economic freedom serve them less well than their richer oeighbors to the north.

Mr. Reagan doesn't hold out much hope for the increases in economic aid that the poor countries will seek at Cancún. But he offers one important promise: to keep mar-kets open to the products of the developing countries. That, as he said last week, is "absolutely essential" --- but it won't be an easy promise to keep. As those countries industrialize, their products increasingly compete with American industries. Their steel, automobile parts, electrical goods and textiles all touch sensitivities in the United States.

Perhaps the best that can come out of Cancún is a tacit agreement to tune down the ideological rhetoric on all sides and start a conversation about the modest but practical steps that hard-pressed governments, both in the rich North and the poor South, think they can actually achieve. Exhortation on ecocomic theory will not be useful. Trade expansion may not be very exciting, but it has the ment of being possible. In a year when they don't really expect to do much more, governments - starting with Mr. Reagan's -have a special obligation to do that much.

Athens and Washington

It may well be that local factors, notably a yearning for change, explain the election vic-tory in Greece of a Socialist regime with a marked neutralist tinge. But there is more to Roughly half of Greece's voters chose a party advocating the closing of American bases and withdrawal from the military wing of NATO. That program evidently was no liability to Premier-elect Andreas Papandreou. And defending military alignment with the West did not save Premier George Rallis, whose New Democracy Party has ruled since Athens rid itself of the "colonels" in 1974.

So when due allowance is made for local factors, the Greek vote carries a wider message for Americans. This news follows the British Labor Party's embrace of neutralism and a surge in anti-nuclear sentiment among West Germany's Social Democrats, Newly Socialist France has moved closer to Washington's view of East-West fundamentals, but France remains the odd country out in NATO, clinging to its nuclear deterrent.

This fraying of the Atlantic consensus is not in the first instance Washington's fault, nor is it conceptually sound. All West Europeans now take for granted a peace guaranteed by a balance of terror; the unilateralists among them want to be spared the risks of harboring regional nuclear weapons while they sit under the American umbrella. Protests are shouted against NATO; the Soviet missiles aimed at Western Europe are mildly censured or condoned.

But President Reagan's intentions on arms negotiations remain obscure. Does he really wish an illusory strategic supremacy? Who speaks for his team on foreign policy? Indeed, slogans aside, is there a policy for dealing with the Soviet Union? The uncertainty burdens Europeans who defend the allied consensus. Ask George Rallis.

His defeat by a declared skeptic in Athens may finally impel sharper articulation of American objectives, Papandreou, a Greekborn but American-bred economist, needs no instruction on the value of an American connection. He knows that if Greece again departs from NATO's military command, the beneficiary will be his nation's bitter rival, Turkey. He knows where those four American bases might move if he evicts them.

As election day neared, Papandreou muted his neutralism and spoke mainly about his plans for radical social reform. And his call for a referendum on Common Market membership requires the assent of President Caramanlis, as Greek voters well understood. So no drastic overnight shift in Greece's international position is likely. Nor is a military takeover imminent as long as nently on the scene.

There is time for talk. Greece isn't "lost." What should be lost is the complacent assumption that American policy is so manifestly sound that it needs no refinement or articulation.

THE NEW YORK TIMES.

It's 'Andreas' No Longer

For years, "Andreas" has been a code word, sometimes even a curse word, in the State Department and assorted chanceries of the West. The familiar reference is to Andreas Papandreou, perennial challenger of the conservative, pro-American Greek establishment. Whether by his Marxist ideology or the influence of leftists in his Socialist movement, it is said, "Andreas" is committed to breaking the ties - the American alliance, NATO, the Common Market - that bind Greece to the West.

But it's "Andreas" no more. "Mr. Papandreou" is to be the new premier of Greece. His party, which had doubled its vote in 1977, doubled it again on Sunday, burying the incumbents. It is a sharp break with a long tradition, and the element of personal vindication cannot be denied. Some part of his triumph, moreover, surely arises from his playing on the distaste felt by many Greeks at the thought of being manipulated over the years by that familiar deus ex machina of Greek politics, the "American Embassy," Americans accustomed to taking Greece for granted have reason for concern.

But whether they have reason for alarm or panic, or whether they would do the Western cause any good by showing these feelings, is another matter. True, Mr. Papandreou has made part of a career out of criticizing what he, and oot only he, sees as an overbearing American presence in Greece and an attitude of insensitivity toward Turkey's invasion of Cyprus and the colonels' dictatorship (1967-1974). But his warnings about going it alone are qualified in fact, if not in word. To count him out of the West could divert him from vital domestic concerns.

Other Opinion

On a Misreading of Reagan

Is Mr. Reagan, yes or no, an advocate of "himited ouclear war" in Europe? The remarks made by the American president to press executives Friday and published Monday, and above all the polemic that has ensued, particularly in Germany, could indicate that he is.

In fact, the polemic was sparked less by the content of Mr. Reagan's words than by the heading that an agency dispatch gave to them, and by the interpretation thus suggested. Indeed, Mr. Reagan begins by expressing a truth that no specialist will contest, that is, that limited nuclear war, in Europe or elsewhere, will not necessarily lead to recourse by ooe of the two superpowers to its central strategic arsenal. However, there is nothing to warrant concluding from this that Washington officially regards such a conflict as an acceptable option.

Quite the contrary: The American president immediately reasserts, as regards the United States, the policy of deterrence by the threat of response at a higher level, which is the only conceivable policy not only for just limiting but indeed for preventing such a conflict in Europe.

Giant Atom Is Depressed

By Daniel S. Greenberg

WASHINGTON — President Reagan is relying on the magic wand of deregulation to revive the moribund nuclear power industry. The shortcoming of this remedy is that environmental and safety red tape is the least of the ailments afflicting nuclear power. Even if it's all slashed away — which it won't be — America's electric utilities won't be racing

America's electric futures won't be racing to place new orders for power reactors.

The basic reason is that energy thrift, abetted by the economic slump, has so taken hold in the United States that little if any growth is required to keep up with national power needs. Excess reserve capacity in 1979 averaged about 33 percent, a safe matrix above the 20 percent that a safe margin above the 20 percent that the industry deems prudent. As energy conservation becomes a way of life, some forecasters — including the cautious National Academy of Sciences— speculate that in 30 years America might be consuming less than the 78 quads (qua-drillion BTUs) that Americans burned in 1979. Several of the generally accepted in 1979. Several of the generally accepted high estimates for the end of the century are in the neighborhood of 100 quads, which means a snail's pace m annual growth of generating capacity.

Against this background of restrained consumption, it is becoming clear that when the costs of nuclear power production are properly counted — rather than fudged by nuclear enthusiasts — the atom is no bargain in the energy marketplace. The still-unresolved problem of waste disposal renders the "true" costs uncountable, though obviously high. But the longer we live with the atom, the more surprises we encounter in tallying its eco-nomics. Now looming on the horizon is the monumental cost of decommissioning — that is, safely scaling up power plants that have run through their life span and are economically obsolete. The cost is estimated at $50 million to $100 million each for the 50 or so plants that will reach retirement age in the next 20 years.

By some estimates, nuclear power once tooted as a source of electricity that would be too cheap to meter — is at least as costly as coal-fired generation, and by the end of this decade may be considera-bly more costly. No wonder, then, that even before the Three Mile Island accident, electric otiliries were backing away so rapidly from nuclear power that new orders for reactors became a rarity, and cancellations of pending construction contracts became commonplace.

At the height of the several energy crises of the last decade, ouclear power derived political support and some popular sympathy from the appeal of energy inde-pendence. After all, unlike vulnerable oil, pendence. After all, unlike vulnerable can it was an all-American product. But this was before the United States became reconciled to exploiting its super-abundant coal supply. Now that coal consumption is on the upswing, and coal is dislodging oil as the nation's basic fuel for generating electricity, it is difficult to boost nuclear power as an oil saver. What it saves is coal, which America possesses in seemingly inexhaustible quantities.

With existing nuclear plants, plus those nearing completion, expected to supply about 7 to 8 percent of the nation's total energy by 1985, the atom is plainly entrenched as a significant contributor to the U.S. energy mix. But given its sagging economics, it is not likely to go beyond that range. The president's energy message attributes the poor market to a "morass of regulations," the implication being that government paperwork accounts for that government paperwork accounts for cancellations and empty order books. The more realistic explanation is that ouclear power was oversold, and then overtaken by energy economics.

Counting On Concepts

By Jonathan Power

L ONDON — Jorge Castalleda, Mexico's secretary for foreign affairs, observes that the United States is in one of its worst periods of ultra-conservativism. At best the Mexicans hope the Cancún summit will produce some "com-mon concepts" that would allow for further developments later.

What might these be? First, Mr. Castañeda says, an acceptance of private investment as an important tool of development, but one that on its own is not enough. Second, an acceptance that developing countries need financial assistance, although without agreeing on amounts and mechanisms. Third, acceptance of agriculture and energy as priorities. And fourth, a se-rious effort to keep trade barriers down and to devise better mecha-nisms for the support of raw mate-

The summit has grown out of the 1980 report by the Brandt Commission — "North-South: A Program for Survival" - but there is little chance, says Mr. Cas-taneda, that the meeting will discuss its central proposal of a major deal between the West and the oil producers to revive the world

Cancun then is going to end in a whisper — unless the Third World bloc succeeds in extracting a promise for what it calls a "global round." And this would be worse than the whisper.

Signs are that some in the Reagan administration and some West Europeans, the French in particular, are pushing for agree-ment oo the principle of a "global round" as a way of averting a pain-ful clash with the South.

Brandt Report

The "global negotiation" con-cept has been tried before without success. It is time-consuming, endlessly so, and at the end of the day — two or three years away? — it would likely have achieved little. Recall the speech that Henry Kissinger, then the U.S. secretary of state, made at the seventh special United Nations session in 1975, after two years of refusal to discuss the "new economic order" that Third World leaders had proposed at their summit in Algiers in 1973. Kissinger declared that the United States was willing "to turn away from confrontation.

Just as the Brandt report has led to Cancun, Kissinger's speech led to a 46-nation meeting in Paris dreamed up by Algerian President Houari Boumedienne and French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing. The meeting became hopeless-ly bogged down in discussing the Third World's long shopping list of proposals.

When President Carter's team took over from the Republicans, the discussions seemed to become even denser and more intractable. Carter had promised to discuss a "common fund" to support raw material prices. Years of negotiating produced a scheme that is still not off the ground. It was too com-plicated and often too remote from real life to be of much use. Yet the developing countries pushed this as their oumber-one cause for the

The Third World appears not to have learned its lesson. When confronted with the chance of the Cancún summit, instead of using the Brandt report as a basis for building a new kind of dialogue that would cut loose from the interminable proposals of the "new economic order," it has merely recharged its old batteries and relabeled them the "global round."

best part of seven years.

It is too late for the Brandt proposals to find their way onto the leaders' desks in time for Cancun. The way can at least be kept clear for another attempt, on another occasion, to look carefully at this unusually significant report, whose full message has still not been properly studied or evaluated. The Mexicans' idea of an agreement on "common concepts" may not add up to very much, but at least it can preserve the world from chasing another false hare.

Skepticism Before Cancún

• A Million More People Every Five Days

By Philip Geyelia

PARIS — A population expert at the Overseas Development Council in Washington has done some quick pencil work on the Cancin summit. The some quick pencil work on the Cancin summit. The calculation is that most participants will devote about five days to the affair, including travel, stopovers and the two days of formal meetings. In those five days, the population of the planet will increase by 1 million people — 700,000 deaths and 1,700,000 births.

That same oet increase will be repeated every succeeding five days, relemilessly. For how long? Nobody knows. But long enough, it is generally agreed, to confound almost beyond measure even the most constructive outcome of the international meeting on concernation and development at the Mexican seaside cooperation and development at the Mexican seaside resort of Cancin.

You have to stare long and hard at the past popula-tion record and the future projections even to begin to comprehend the challenge confronting the 22 presidents and prime ministers in Cancún.

In the first quarter of this century, world popula-tion increased by 360 million; in the second, the in-crease nearly doubled; in the third it was up another 1.5 billion. The increase for the last quarter-century is expected to be 2.2 billion.

By the first quarter of the 21st century, the increase may be down a bit, to around 2.1 billion, and at some point later in the century, worldwide population may even level off to zero growth. Assorted studies differ widely on when, or at what level. But never mind. The total, even when the population of the world stops growing, will be at least double and quite possibly triple the estimated 4.5 billion people on Earth today.

Measured in Spirit

With that many people already competing for the world's wealth and resources, with some 3.4 billion of them in the poorer developing nations, and 900 milthem in the poorer developing nations, and 900 million classified by the World Bank in the category of "absolute poverty" (that is, barely existing)—with all that, there would be urgency enough for Cancin's unique assemblage of big and little, rich and poor, medium-sized and middle-income nations.

The agenda is loose and technical: food and hunger, trade, energy and international finance are the general topics. The "developing" countries are rich only in numbers (around 120) and centered mostly in Alrica, Asia, Latin America — the so-called South.

Africa, Asia, Latin America — the so-called South. They seek some grand and global negotiation on all the world's inequities and imbalances in a way that would give weight to their numerical majority.

Nobody heading into the meeting can say confidently how the issue can be resolved. There will be oo dentry now the issue can be resolved, I here will be ob-final communique, Cancin's accomplishments will be measured in spirit — in the degree, as a veteran devel-opment expert pots it, to which "there is general ac-ceptance of the indivisibility of the problem."

This means a general acceptance of the inevitable consequences for the rich — the loss of increasingly valuable markets — if the poor get poorer. But the test will remain in the force, as well as the nature, of the follow-up. "This could be a last echo or a new beginning," says one of the conference planners.

Hopes for later rest in large part on the forces that created Cancun.

The Gravest Issue

Powerful impetus has come from the industrialized nations in seven-nation summits in Venice and Ot-tawa, and from the "developing" countries through initiatives in the United Nations. But oot the least important impetus should be the speciacle of stagger-ing, almost uncontrollable population growth.

It is not an easy issue for the world's politicians to address. Other than education in family planning, many experts see no clear "population solution." As an ODC briefin participant will call for a rise in death rates to assure food security and alleviate hunger." Still less will anybody be lobbying for abortion or birth control.
Yet few would dispute an ODC briefer's argument that "a poor, hungry people have oothing to lose by embracing strange cause

A recent Library of Congress study documents the point that population is exploding most dramatically in the wrong places: in the poorest countries, in the cities, "in nearly all those developing countries where the United States and its allies have vital security interests." The list includes oil producers (Mexico, Venczucia, Indonesia), guardians of "choke point" sea-lanes (Egypt and Panama), and African producers of cobalt, manganese and chrominm.

Robert McNamara, then the World Bank's president, warned in 1979 that "short of nuclear war itself, population growth is the gravest issue that the world faces over the decades immediately ahead." The extent to which the Cancin summittees give weight to this issue will say a lot about the consequences of that this Issue was ______ glittering gathering. O/981, The Washington Post.

Reagan administration loudly in the lead, would Forebodings of 'Supply-Side Imperialism'

By Hobart Rowen

WASHINGTON — If President Reagan really trusted the marketplace, he would propose at Cancun the abandonment of textile quotas that inhibit Third World progress. But since that would throw American companies into a tizzy and create a panie in Europe, it won't happen.

Reagan talks of a kind of exten-sion of supply-side economics to the world at large. In keeping with his rose-colored view of the corpo-rate world, he has faith that if underdeveloped nations drop their hostility to foreign investment and investors, and allow sufficient incentives for capital to come in, the private enterprise system can solve most of their problems. A Democratic Senate staffer calls this a "new supply-side imperialism." She notes that in some of the poorest of the poor nanons, there are no private sectors.

Re Stanley Karnow on President Marcos (IHT, Sept. 25): The truth is that if President Marcos may be faulted, it is not for a mailed-fist

To a fault, Mr. Marcos has refused to use strong-arm methods. For a small nation, we have Herculean problems in fulfilling the rising expectations of 48 million Filipinos in the face of double-digit inflation brought by spiraling oil costs. President Marcos looks to the judgment of history.

the potential for private businesses if they share the fruits of invest-ment, and if they get basic as-surances from host countries. But they know some elements of devel-opment aid can only be managed and financed by governments.

President Reagan and his team will be going to Cancin arguing against the creation of any new institutions or programs to help the Third World. They support, instead, the existing loan and grant system operated by the World Bank and the IMF.

Bank and the IMF.

Third World leaders have every right to be cynical about this approach, coming as it does after the administration systematically set out to clip the wings of both the IMF and the World Bank at the recent Washington meeting. Finance ministers of some 140 nations left Washington with clear evidence that the United States plans to reduce its relative commitment for subsidized 50-year money for the poor nations through the Bank's soft-loan affiliate.

All this is exceedingly disap-pointing to moderate Third World leaders who had hoped that some and his colleagues know, are far thing tangible would come out of from bright.

The rich nations, Virata says bit-

As a minimum, the poor nations at Cancin will look for more aid, especially in developing more of their own energy, and to break down the trade barriers set up by the rich. But the prospects, Virata

Irrelevant Reaganisms

By Stanley Karnow

WASHINGTON — Rozald Reagan's belief that impoverished nations ought to rely less on U.S. and other foreign aid than on the "magic of the marketplace," as he puts it, is just as naive as his illusion that private corporations will make up for cuts in public welfare programs at home.

Thus, in his first major forey into the so-called North-South dialogue, Reagan is likely to broaden the already widening gap between the United States and the coun-tries of Asia, Africa and Latin

Alienating those areas works against U.S. economic interests, since they are sources of raw materials as well as markets for U.S. taports, and account for one-fourth of U.S. investment abroad, or roughly $50 billion.

So it is senseless to blame up-heavals in El Salvador or Ethiopia solely on Communist subversion, when the root causes lie in poverty, hunger, disease and despair -conditions that stimulate revolution. But Reagan seems unable to see the connection. There was a good deal of muted tension in Washington a couple of weeks ago at meetings of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, where Reagan ad-ministration officials told Third World finance ministers to tighten their belts or expect reductions in U.S. assistance. Zimbabwe's outspoken finance minister, Enos Nkala, later warned that the United States is headed toward "direct confrontation"

with the developing nations. Building Roads

Regimes in developing countries are often responsible for much of their economic trouble. Many are mismanaged by leaders guided by half-baked Marxist notions that long ago proved bankrupt. Some are hobbied by corruption. Many poor nations suffer from distorted priorities. (Mideast governments spend twice as much on their military establishments as on health

But even if they underwent drastic reforms, these nations would find it extremely difficult to pull themselves up by their bootstraps, as Reagan recommends, especially in these times of worldwide economic hardship.

Private corporations do not build roads or irrigation disches or hospitals in Senegal or Burma or Paraguay without government fi-nancing, for the simple reason that they cannot earn a profit on such investments. Those projects must be underwritten by aid programs, even in the United States, where the finest highway network on Earth could not have been built without folder! found without federal funds.

Nor is it rational to assert, as some Reagan administration spokesmen do, that the developing countries can resolve their eco-nomic dilemma by emulating the American experience of the past.

Somalia and Bangladesh are not the United States of the 19th century, with Rockefellers and Camegies prepared to make huge invest-ments and reap even bigger re-turns. They are dismal and overpopulated — not the America of limitless horizons.

Reagan Aide Fired After Saying Russia Has Nuclear Superiority

From Agency Disputches
WASHINGTON — A military aide to President Reagan, who de-clared the Soviet Union had achieved full ouclear superiority over the United States, has lost his National Security Council post, a White House aide said Tuesday:

Gen. Schweitzer, in remarks to several hundred Army officers oo Monday, said the Soviet Union is "on the move, they are going to strike." He spoke of "a drift toward war" and said the United States was "in the greatest danger that the republic has ever faced since its founding days."

He also said that Moscow now has nuclear superiority over the United States in all three legs of the strategic "triad" — land-based and submarine-based missiles and long-range bombers.

Gen. Schweitzer, at the White House since January, had been director of the office of defense policil. He was speaking before several given prior clearance, the aide said, adding, "He clearly violated the rules."

"It's fair to say it is more pessimistic in tone and substance than the president's own view is," Mr.

Gergen said.

During a picture-taking session in the Oval Office, Mr. Reagan was asked if he agreed with Gen.
Schweitzer's assessment of a "drift" toward war."

No, I think this country could have been on a road that could be described that way when we were unilaterally disarming and had a widening window-of vulnerability and narrowing margin of safety." Mr. Reagan said.

"So you think we've reversed that?" a reporter asked. "Yes," said the president.

Gen. Schweitzer was removed because he had violated a regulation that speeches by members of the National Security Council be

Gen. Schweitzer said the Soviet threat "is believed not to exist. That's the feeling in Europe. They think it's automatic, another 30 years of peace. That's wrong. The Soviets are on the move. They are going to strike. They've got every incentive and the capability."

in regards to Poland, he said that "a possible, certainly threatened Soviet invasion" is the leading challenge to the Western alli-ance. While analysts may debate the timing or strength, he said; "the evidence continues to mount that the Soviet Union very much has this in mind."

Falling Stones Leave Hole In Leg of the Great Sphinx

CAIRO — About 120 stones have dropped from the left rear leg of the Great Sphinx, leaving a hole 6 feet wide by 9 feet high, the daily Al Ahram reported Tuesday.

Egyptologists fear that the head of the 5,000-year-old stone figure may be the next to fall unless scientists can arrest the eroding process caused by a rising water table, the newspaper said. The paper said the stones that dropped out were from repairs made during the Greco-Roman era about 2,000 years ago. Erosion has been attributed to sandstorms, wind, rain and pollution, but one of the most popular theories is that water is seeping up through the bottom of the statues, bringing corrosive safts

Studies have been made for several years to determine the cause of the problem, and a number of cures have been proposed or tried, including forcing glue into the stone to reinforce the neck. Other prosposals have been to put a glass bubble over the statue or to rebury it in hot desert sands as it had Jain for centuries until the French unearthed the body in 1926.

White House Discounts Reports Of Friction Caused by Nixon Trip

By Hedrick Smith

New York Times Service WASHINGTON - The Reagan administration, trying to smooth over potential political complications arising from the visit to four Arab nations last week hy Richard M. Nixon, has sought to squelch reports that the trip caused internal frictions in the administration and to minimize the government's involvement in the trip.

White House and State Department spokesmen acknowledged that Mr. Nixon informed President Reagan and other high officials in advance of his tour, that he received briefing materials from the State Department and help in arranging the visit from Gen. Vernon D. Walters, ambassador-at-

But the administration spokesmen insisted that the former president's visit to Saudi Arabia, Jordan, Morocco and Tunisia, after he attended the funeral of Sadat in Egypt on Oct. 10, had heen a private trip. They said he was carrying no messages from the Reagan administration and was not undertaking any mission on its behalf.

Nick Ruwe, Mr. Nixon's chief of staff, who accompanied him to the Middle East, called the trip "a pri-vate, self-started deal" even though results of his talks. Reagan administration officials said at first that they had not attached much significance to the former president's travel plans, but some have since said that Mr. Nixon apparently was using his role at the Sadat funeral as a springboard for wider travel and possibly for his own political rehabilitation.

Over the weekend, Mr. Reagan rejected Mr. Nixon's proposal for an economic quarantine of Libya, out forward in a press statement in Paris on Saturday. And on Monday, the administration went to some length to separate itself from Mr. Nixon's trip and any conclusions he may have reached or soundings he may have taken.

"If anyone stops to think about it, what the beck could Nixon do for us that we couldn't do for ourselves and better?" a high-ranking official said. "Maybe we're not sufficiently attimed to the political impact of this."

Both the White House and the State Department specifically de-nied a report in The Washington Post that Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig, Jr., once chief of staff in the Nixon White House.

White House in the dark. "The story is wrong," said Larr

Speakes, the White House spokes man. "Nixon told Reagan abou his trip when he was at the White House before departing for Sadat's funeral. Prior to that, Mr. Speakes said Mr. Nixon talked to Deputy Secretary of State William P. Clark about obtaining briefing papers for Saudi Arabia. He added that Mr. Nixon told Mr. Reagan about the trip before be told Mr. Haig. Senior White House officials did not learn of Mr. Nixon's plans, they said, until the U.S. delegation was about to head home from Cairo and found that Mr. Nixon was not to be aboard. Dean E. Fischer, the State Department spokesman, said that Mr.

Haig learned of Mr. Nixon's travel plans on Oct. 8, the day on which the delegation departed, and that the secretary of state had instructed an assistant to inform the White House. This, Mr. Fischer said, evidentily was not done.

At the White House, officials ac knowledged that Mr. Nixon's in-volvement at the Sadat funeral and subsequent travels had "touched a raw nerve for a lot of people." But after an initial flow of critical mail, an official said, the public rehad helped to arrange Mr. Nixon's sponse had turned more positive.

There are hand-painted wood-en tops, papier-maché carp that make noise when the wind whis-tles through their mouths (the carp is a symbol of determination and energy), there are kites, kimono-clad figures, delicate painted birds with paper-thin feathers carved from a single block of wood, hair-style dolls to be looked at from the back.

Tiny clay bells decorated with 12 animals represent the signs of the zodiac. They all have symbolic meaning. Rats are associated with Daikoku, god of prosperity; tigers are symbols of courage; horses symbolize human perseverance; wild boars signify prosperity hut also poverty in some cases, and so on.

Yamato ningyo influenced 19th-century European toy mak-ers. These dolls (Yamato is an ancient word for Japan, ninyo means dolls), made of combina-tions of hard and soft material and with movable heads, are known as "silent envoys" or "friendship dolls," and many Westerners consider them the typical Japanese doll, although they are only one of many types.

A French manufacturer named Greffier won honorable mention for his Yamato dolls in the Paris toy exposition of 1855, at which no Japanese toy makers were represented. Later exhibits in 1867 and 1878 did, however, feature dolls by Japanese makers.

In Hiroshima, a monument con-tains thousands of cranes folded by children, together with the inscription: "Here is our hope and our prayer: That peace will reign in the world."

New Findings in U.S. Back Theory Of Viruses' Role in Human Cancer

THREE AGROUND — The tug Vernicos Giorgos, right, lies half-submerged in St. Brides Bay near Solva, Wales, after being blown ashore. It was towing two other tugs from Liverpool to Greece when it lost a propeller in heavy weather, and all three were grounded. No one was injured. Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — The longheld suspicion that viruses may cause human cancer has strong new support because of two discoveries by scientists at the Na-tional Institutes of Health.

One group reports m last Friday's issue of the journal Science that it has determined the exact. molecule-by-molecule structure of a cancer virus — a sarcoma virus -carried in the genes of mice.

At the same time, other scientists at the institutes have found sequences of the same family of viral genes, in this case viruses that cause leukemia, in human genetic material. Together, these and other discoveries add up to what many scientists call the best evidence yet that viruses are indeed a cause of human cancers,

Some scientists in recent years have cast doubt on this, despite the known involvement of viruses in cancers of many animals, including apes, cows, cats, mice and

Genetic Engineering

In cancer, what scientists call the "viral genome," the genetic material of the virus, may be only one part of a still little understood cellular process that leads to a cancer. These viruses, or viral genes, may in some unknown circumstances interact with other genes to start making cancer cells in wild and uncontrolled numbers.

Although the whole process is still little understood, new facts are emerging. This is made possible by genetic engineering, the new "re-combinant DNA" technology that has scientists chopping up DNA and RNA — the chemical materials of genes and viruses - and ma-

Kenzo: A Sober Palette With the Colors to Watch

By Hebe Dorsey

enal Herald Tribune DARIS - Good news at Kenzo's. Long on the fringes of big business and worldwide fame, he is now finally in orbit and financially organized. His new manager, Francois Banfumé, whom he brought in 18 months ago, said that sales have jumped from $6 million in 1979 to $14 million in 1981. Next year they should

I'm doing like the Arabs. I'm not rushing." A solid, cool man in his mid-40s, Baufumé is a French business school graduate who learned the ropes at Courrèges and GFT (Gruppo Finanziario Tessile) where he launched Giorgio Armani's women's-line export sales. What he has done for Kenzo, in organization and delivery, has al-ready been registered by grateful store owners all over the world. For Kenzo was popular but badly in need of a good manager. By far the best value for the money, the creative Japanese designer has been one of the most influential talents in Paris and the most copied as well. A lot of the styles in-the streets were started by him— the baggies, the clowns' overalls, the oversize blazer, the rose prints, the frilly blouse, to name a few. The current explosion of color and those ruffled minis are Kenzo's too. His shop on Place des Victoires is constantly jammed with customers — and copiers.

It is interesting to note what's not selling is color, which Kenzo put on the map. At his showing Tuesday he displayed a more sober palette. One must take a strong look at Kenzo's new colors for they will eventually take over lots of khakis, terra-cottas, deep blues, sophisticated greens and a garnet red that is far from that primary red he used to love. The only bright colors pop up in his Peruvian group, good tapered jersey pants with a brightly striped sash and colorful sweater. There is also a Highlander look, made of subdued cotton plaids.

Kenzo also had those frilled minis, ruffled again but made of flowered cotton and topped by big, loose, pastel pullovers. His mail-lots with flowered sarongs were adorable as were the accessories, including flat lace ballerinas. The ruffled romantic look bas been ex-

Now, with Baufumé at the helm, the ambiance may not be as exotic but the wheels are turning. People can copy, but they never catch the essence of Kenzo's clothes. For his success is not only one of experiise and knowing what in do with fabrics and colors. It is, as Lidii put it, "the combination of the playfulness of country fabrics with a sophisticated city color sense." It is also a sign that Kenzo has remained close to his Japanese roots, where nature and art co-ex-

Rebels in Philippines Explode Into Action

By Keyes Beech Las Angeles Times Service

MANILA - After going quietly about its business for a dozen years in relative obscurity, the New People's Army, the military wing of the Communist Party in the Philippines, is strongly asserting itself. During the past year, and especially during the past six months, guerrillas have shown a greater willingness to fight government forces. Hardly a day goes by without a report of clashes.

"It used to be that you found the NPA in only a few places," a Western source said. "Now they've broken out like measles all over the country." Since the guerrillas attack on their own terms, government troops frequently get the worst of it. Some Americans who fought in Vietnam say the guerrillas are showing professionalism worthy of the Viet Cong during the early 1960s phase of the Indochina war. "Some of their ambushes are really sharp," said a U.S. officer, "and they're getting better all the

According to this analysis, politics in the Philippines was polar-ized further after Mr. Marcos lifted martial law this year and then assured himself of six more years in power in a presidential election run in such a way that be could not

The so-called moderate opposition, already largely irrelevant, contributed to its own demise by failing to put up a candidate against Mr. Marcos. Rather than face certain defeat, old-guard politicians made a futile attempt to boycott the election.

Favorable Climate

The political and economic climate has seldom been more favorable for the Communists.

Political polarization in Manila means little or nothing to the rural poor, 42 percent of whom live below the poverty line. But there are other factors that do. One is the state of the Philippines' economy.

The world market for the country's four principal exports — sug-ar, copra, copper and timber — is "Usually, if sugar is down, copra is up or vice versa," said a Catholic priest in Mindanao. "Now everything is down all at once and people are hurting."

Meanwhile, the savage little war

The steady increase in military activity by the guerrillas has coincided with a gradual fading away of the country's other insurgency—that of the Islamic-based Moro National Liberation Front in the southern Philippines.

Less than 18 months ago, 85 percent of the Philippines' armed forces were deployed against the separatists. Now the figure is down to 60 percent, enabling the government to concentrate more of its forces against the Communists.

Figures on Communist strength vary wildly. The guerrillas claim 10,000 armed men nationwide with 2,500 hard-core regulars. More conservative estimates put the figure at between 6,000 and 7,000 armed surerillas.

armed guerrillas. Regardless of which figure is correct, the New People's Army has come a long way since it was born 13 years ago in central Luzon with a band of 60 Maoist fighters.

the same way the Viet Cong got theirs during the early part of the

The Communists have been equally busy on the political front. In an effort to make themselves more acceptable to non-Communist opponents of the Marcos regime, they have shed their Manist mage and emerged as nationalists.

U.S. Sues Over Grumman Bid to Block LTV

UNIONDALE, N.Y.—The U.S. Labor Department has called for the ouster of the three trustees of Grumman's pension plan in a suit that, if successful, will help LTV's $450-million bid to take over Grumman. The department asked U.S. District Judge Jacob Mishler on Monday to appoint outsiders to replace the trustees — who are top Grumman officials — on the ground that they violated provisions of federal pen-officials — on the ground that they violated provisions of federal pension law designed to prevent the assets of employee pension plans from being used to benefit the company.

Robert Eccles, a department attorney, said the trustees had breached their responsibilities to the plan's beneficiaries when they authorized the purchase of 1.16 million shares of Grumman stock last week in an effort to help block the bid LTV made late last month. Grumman said the trustees deny that their action was inconsistent with their obligations.

One formulation of the capital increase would raise equity capital to

NEW YORK - Videotape recording of copyrighted television programs, even if done at home only for private use, is an infringement of the rights of those who own the programs, a U.S. appellate court has ruled.

As a result, the court indicated Monday, the millions of consumers who use videotape ma-chines to record programs off their television screens could be sued for damages, along with the compa-nies that manufacture or distribute such devices, the stores that sell them and the advertising agencies

Mortage Delinquencies Worry U.S. Banks

By Winston Williams

New York Times Service CHICAGO — Mortgage delinency and foreclosure rates in the United States are reaching the worrisome proportions of the mid-1970s, putting the housing indusary under still more pressure.

This trend has stirred concern among home builders and real estate salesmen, who fear that more foreclosures will depress bome values and further weaken an industry niready staggered by high inter-est rates. Prices of existing houses are being affected, new home construction has been in a slump for two years and mortgage lenders have had mounting losses. Mortgage delinquencies — payments more than 60 days past due - are rising to serious levels, said Brian Smith, an economist for the U.S. League of Savings Associa-tions, a trade organization of savings and loan associations.

While the figures are climbing, however, there is hope that they can be kept within manageable bounds. Many lenders and private

WASHINGTON — The International Monetary Fund has reached a tentative accord on a $5.8-billion, three-year loan to India, the largest single aid package the fund has ever considered, monetary sources said Tuesday.

They said the loan proposal goes before the IMF executive board Nov. 9 for final discussion and the United States is expected to question the loan's requirements.

Under the tentative agreement, the sources said, the IMF will insist that India fight inflation through monetary and fiscal restraint while promoting private sector development through reduced government regulations. They said the India had agreed to specific controls on the growth of domestic credit but there will no devaluation of the rupce.

is not yet a crisis.

In normal times, the delinquency rate has been 0.6 to 0.7 percent of mortgages outstanding. In February, 1976, in the afternath of the severe 1974-75 recession, the rate was 1.06 percent.

The savings association league began keeping track of the rate in 1953. It got as high as 1.41 percent twice — in February, 1962, and February, 1964 — reflecting periods of economic trouble. Housing economists say that high delinquency rates then were considered more tolerable. For one thing, monthly mortgage payments were generally a smaller part of family income, making it easier to catch

Now foreclosures are on the rise. The Federal Housing Administra-tion, which insures about 10 percent of all home mortgages, report-ed more than 23,000 foreclosure proceedings against FHA-covered properties in the first 11 months of the fiscal year that ended Sept. 30. This was about 30 percent more ous fiscal year. The Veterans Administration, which also guarantees mortgage payments, says foreclosures are running 1,200 a month, or 20 per-cent ahead of last year's pace.

Figures on conventional mort-gages compiled by the savings as-sociation league and by the Mortgage Bankers Association of America indicate that the problem of past-due payments is almost as had as it was during the 1974-75

Mortgage bankers believe that delinquencies, which normally increase after a recession is well under way, will swell significantly early next year.

Foreclosure is time-consuming and costly, lenders say, so it is used only in extreme cases. Instead, bankers say they generally prefer to refinance the loan or allow the borrower to make only interest payments for a while. But any alternative will mean additional problems for thrift institu-

[Sony said it plans to fight the decision, United Press International reported from San Francisco. A statement released Monday night by Kengi Tamiya, executive vice president of Sony Corp. of America, said Sony would take the case to the Supreme Court if necessary.]

Sony, the manufacturer singled out in the test case five years ago to represent those who make vi-deotape recorders, became in 1975 the first company to offer the recorders. It estimates that 3.5 mil-lion U.S. homes now have them and that 1.5 million more units will be sold this year.

Monday's decision was issued by the three-judge panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in San Francisco. It reversed a 1979 ruling made by Judge Warren J. Ferguson in Federal District Court in Los Angeles. The appeals court sent the case back to Judge Ferguson and ordered him to fashion some sort of relief for the plaintiffs — Universal City Stodios and Walt Disney Productions.

Neither the district court nor the Neither the district court nor the court of appeals has addressed the question of how extensive damages might be. This gives experts no basis for estimating what impact a final ruling might have on the price of videocare and addressed. of videorape recorders. They now sell for $600 and up. The cassettes used for taping programs sell for less than $20 apiece.

The ruling in San Francisco seems to recognize that it would be next to impossible for owners of the shows (usually television networks or production studios) to determine case by case who was retrading to close up 4.75 to 851.88. Advances led declines by 980 to 530 and volume swelled to 51 million shares from 41.49 million cording or bow much the recordings were costing them.

Acknowledging that the relief question was "exceedingly complex," the court suggested that one solution might be to have the manufacturers pay royalties to the shows' owners. But the court also said an injunction against further manufacture and sale of the devices should be reconsidered. Judge Ferguson had said be did not believe such action was appropriate.

Stephen Kroft, the Beverly Hills lawyer representing the two movie studios, said he would press for such an injunction. The companies that are directly affected, in addi-tion to Sony, would be those licensed to make its Betamax, including Sanyo and Toshiba; and major distributors of it, including Zenith and Sears, Roebuck. Unless the decision is re

by the Supreme Court, it will lay the groundwork for a similar suit against Sony's rival, Matsushita, which produces the VHS recorder system marketed under labels including RCA, Panasonic, Quasar, JVC, General Electric, Magnavox, and Sylvania

Virtually all videotape recorders are manufactured in Japan. Hita-chi and JVC make Matsushita's model under license. Besides Sony, the defendants in the test case are four retail store chains, the advertising agency for Sony's Betamax recorder, and one Betamax owner.

(Continued from Page 7) co Republican, said, due to the re-cession, the administration should be projecting deficits totaling about $30 billion more over the next three fiscal years than it has, making it impossible to achieve the President Reagan's goal of balancing the budget in that time. The Reagan administration economists conceded that the administration may be facing larger budget delicits than its projec-tions. "I don't think we disagree with them [Sen. Domenici's num-bers] in any significant way," Mr. Kudlow said.

Mr. Jordan, the council's mem-

Mr. Jordan, the council's member responsible for forecasting, said U.S. gross national product in the third quarter "was flat or slightly down" and that the fourth quarter "about the same."

But he said economic recovery should start in the first quarter of 1982 with sound expansion in real economic growth picking up during the year. Third quarter GNP figures are expected this week.

In an interview. Murray In an interview, Murray President's Council of Economic Advisers, concurred with Mr. Jordan's assessment, saying the econ-omy will be on an "upbeat" by next spring though the United States is currently in a "quite mild" recession and unemployment may climb to 8 percent before declining in 1982. Last month's jobless rate was 7.5 per-

Personal Income Up

Meanwhile, the Commerce Department reported that U.S. personal income rose 0.8 percent in September, following a slightly revised 0.9-percent increase in August and a revised 1.4-percent rise in July. More than one-third of the increase came from high-yield savings deposits and investments, the department said.

However, personal consumption expenditures fell $1 billion after climbing $36.5 billion in August, a reflection of lower levels of antomobile purchases as many rebate promotions ended. As a result, personal savings climbed last month after falling in August.

Disposable personal income (income less tax payments) rose at a slightly slower rate than in August and reflecting the smaller gains in wages and salaries.

Mr. Jordan said he expects inflation to continue a year-over-year deceleration of "between one and two percentage points compared with 1981." The of slow and stable money growth and declining inflation rates means that the long-term outlook for nominal interest rates.
is for a "sustained downward trend," he added.

But Mr. Kudlow cautioned: "Until markets are persuaded of a clean break from past policy errors and broken promises, longer term interest rates are not likely to fall in any sustained fashion and economic recovery will remain an elu-

LONDON — Four currencies will be traded on the London International Financial Futures Exchange when it opens next September, the chairman of its planning group, John Barkshire, said Tuesday at a news conference. He said that, in addition to sterling, Deutsche marks, Swiss francs and yen, all quoted against the dollar, short-term Eurodollar and sterling interest rate contracts and 3 British government bond would be traded on the exchange.

In the lawsuits over the Mexican oil spill, almost no one expects the company to be held seriously hable: The rig was leased to Permargo, a state-owned Mexican drilling concern, which was contractually responsible for its operation.

"I'm very bullish on this compan said George Gaspar, an analyst with Rob-ert W. Baird & Co. whose publication, The Gaspar Report, issues regular advisories on Sedco and other companies in the offshore drilling business

As part of a serious move into oil and gas exploration, Sedco has entered in recent months into a joint venture with Phillips Petroleum to explore and develop what is adjudged a major new oilfield off the Ivory Coast.

In a stock market coup two months

Earlier this month, in a move whose possible riskiness wornes some stock analysts, it was disclosed that Sedeo had become the largest single stockholder of Marathon Oil and was interested in buying more. This fueled speculation, denied by the company, that Sedoo had its eye on a takeover of the 17th largest U.S. oil сопрапу.

Earnings Building

In the meantime, Sedco's earnings continue to build. In fiscal 1981, the company earned $66.4 million, or $2.08 a share, on revenues of $385 million, up from 1980 earnings of $38.6 million, or $1.24 a share, on revenues of $30) million. Mr. Gaspar wrote in an Oct. 2 report, "We anticipate wheters and oct. 2 report, "We arrive an acceptance of $300 million. substantial earnings gains for fiscal 1982."

For 1983, Mr. Gaspar has forecast that, as Sedco's oil and gas exploration ventures generate more income, the company's earnings will soar to the $4.30-$4.70 range on revenues of more than $615 mil-

Sedco President B. Gill Clements --- son

"I'd say it's certainly a company on the move," said Rex Gwinn, an analyst for Rotan-Mosle in Houston. "They're taking more of the cash flow that they know is going to be generated on the offshore drilling side, and redeploying it to the oil and gas side."

Sedco began exploration for oil and gas in 1978. So far, the move has yet to pay off. Its pretax losses in oil and gas opera-tions grew from $1 million in 1978 to $25.6 million in fiscal 1981.

But analysts expect the oil and gas operations to begin paying off in the next year. Meanwhile, Sedoo's position as one of the world's top offshore drilling contractors continues to provide it with a solid financial underpinning. Sedeo is expanding its drilling fleet, revenues from whose contract operations brought in $333 million of the company's $385 mil-lion in revenues in fiscal 1981.

Reflections on the Tyranny of Slenderness.

WOMEN'S desire to be thin is no trivial matter of fashion. Kim Chernin contends in her first book. Indeed, in their obsession to reduce, women are literally diminishing themselves, she vehemently insists. And not just their bodies: "When we scratch the surface of this obsession with weight and food we enter the hidden emotional life of a woman." There we find degrees of self-denial where the rejection of fat amounts to the warding-off of sensuality, and where the extreme of starving oneself through the disease anorexia nervosa becomes the ultimate obliteration of

And why, Miss Chernin asks, has this obsession lately grown more extreme? Why, at this particular histori-cal juncture, has a child like the 12-year-old fashion model Christine Olman replaced voluptuous Marilyn Monroe as "the ideal of feminine beauty?" Why, during the 1960s, did anorexia nervosa begin "to be a widespread social disease among women?" Why, during the late '60s and early '70s, did bulmarexia, in which periods of extreme eating are following by self-induced vomiting, begin to be observed as a condition among women? Why was the 1960s the decade in which so many diet organizations, such as Weight Watchers and Overeaters Anonymous, appeared? Why does child pornography now appear to be oo the rise, as well as our awareness of the widespread problem of father-daughter incest, if not the problem itself?

Omnipotence

Because, Miss Chemin, submits, the 1960s also happen to be the era in which "the Feminist Movement began to emerge, asserting woman's right to authority, development, dignity, liber-ation and above all, power," And there is something in a patriarchal society that doesn't like women to have power. What Miss Chernin suspects this something to be is male envy of female procreativity, as well as unconscious memory of the time, shortly after birth, when mother was huge and omnipotent.

But whatever the cause of the hostility, women have gotten its message, Miss Chernin concludes. While feminist groups were talking about how women could grow, weight-watching clubs were figuring out how women might shrink. Where liberated mothers were throwing away their bras, anorexic daughters were trying to get rid of their breasts, "in order to keep the body from acquiring the capacity lo breed memory and awaken ambiv-alence." Thus, we come face-to-face with a woman's soul in this last quarter of the 20th century." "It has be-come a death mask, a grinning skull, pleased with its conquest" of gross flesh, and "stubbornly denying that it

Degree of Denigration

One can point to a couple of flaws in Miss Chernin's interesting thesis. For one thing, the case she makes that obesity may oot be unhealthy seems a little hypothetical and tendentious. And even though it is true that obesity in itself is not a risk factor in the ab-sence of high blood pressure and heart disease, the fact remains that thinness feels better than fatness -at least it does to me, a male, who is struggling to ward off old age and dying, just as a lot of dieting female trying to do, I suspect.

For another thing, her explana for men's fear of fully developmen seems slightly fallacion men (and women) actually do res memory of the all-powerful me then why don't they worthin build monuments to her, just ag once did to gods that were consid-omnipotent? Miss Chernin may 1 hit on an explanation for those. Leaster Island statues, but a sire element of fear is needed to son for the degree of denigration she potbesizes. Fear may indeed exis men's attitudes toward women of castration, or a desire to be pendent on and even engulfed ! woman - hut Miss Chemin has accounted for it plausibly.

Finally, one wishes she had to little about herself beyond describ an episode or two of compulsive ing. After all, the culture transmit attitudes to the individual through medium of the family. So a little a in the way of autobiography we have helped — the mention of a ent or two, perhaps, or acknowle ment of the father of the auth daughter - if only to sterilize reader against any suspicion that I Chernin is projecting personal pe

Still, for all it lacks in logic and all its unscientific impression there is a poetic truth at the hear The Obsession." Eloquently writ passionate in its rhetoric and conently absorbing, it turns an apparly trivial subject inside out to m unacknowledged attitudes and pr dices. We Americans probably worry far too much about fat and appearance. Perhaps Miss Cheral right when she argues that the mi lem is out the shallowness of our ceptions, but rather, the depth of feelings.

Sitting East was Eddie Wold, a quiet young man who has a well-deserved reputation for cool nerves and re-morseless efficiency at the table. He sat quietly in the bidding while his partner, Dr. George Rosenkranz of Mexico City, bid diamonds with en-thusiasm up to the four level and his opponents landed in five clubs. West's cue bid in diamonds had implied sup-nort for his partner's club suit. port for his partner's club suit.

The bidding had warned South to expect a bad diamond break, so after winning the opening diamond lead with the ace, he ruffed a diamond with the jack in dummy.

If East had made the oormal play of overruffing. South's play would have been easy. He would have ruffed another diamond with the club king, thrown the last diamond on the spade ace and drawn trumps.

However, East smoothly discarded a heart, giving a convincing impression of a man who could not overruif. South was now convinced that the club queen was on his left, probably singleton or doubleton. His oext move was to cash the spade ace and ruff a spade to enter his hand.

Ruffing low would have been safe if West did indeed have the club queen singleton or doubleton. Even if there was an overruff, possible if South's distribution was 1-4-7-1 or 1-3-7-2, the contract would still have been safe. But South could see oothing wrong

PONTIAC, Mich. — Secondyear quarterback Erie Hipple, making his first National Football League start, passed for 336 yards and four touchdowns and ran for two other scores, leading the De-troit Lions to a 48-17 crusher over the Chicago Bears Monday night.

Hipple, who started the season as Detroit's No. 3 quarterback, got the call after second-stringer Jeff Komlo faltered for two straight weeks in relief of injured regular Gary Danielson. He had touch-down runs of 1 and 4 yards, and threw a 2-yard TD pass to Rick Kane as Detroit stormed to a 27-14 halftime lead.

Completing 14 of 25 passes, Hipple hit David Hill with a 10-yard TD pass in the third quarter and Freddie Scott on a 44-yarder in the fourth. Late in the game, he connected with Leonard Thompson for a 94-yard scoring play, the third-longest in club history. De-troit's Eddie Murray kicked field goals of 49 and 53 yards; his second, coming on the final play of the first half, Detroit's second Chicago's Walter Payton rushed 19 times for 89 yards and scored on a I-yard plunge. Bear rookie re-ceiver Marcus Anderson caught an 85-yard TD pass from Vince Evans. Anderson's six catches for 176 yards were the most by a Chicago receiver since 1970.

Uneasy Days

These are troubled days in These are troubled days in Spain. Seven months before the World Cup, the national coach Jose Santamaria is bearing the rumbling of discontent at his leadership. Champion Real Sociedad is already eliminated from Europe and Real Madrid, having brawled its way past Tatbanya of Hungary, now faces more experienced opponents from East Germany's Carl Zeiss Jena. Zeiss Jena.

The French too, have almost been decimated across Europe. Apart from the aggressive Corsicans of Bastia, the other survivor is Bordeaux. Les Girondins of Bordeaux invested heavily for this Euro-challenge, signing international midfielder Jean Tigana and Yugoslavia's penalty-scoring goal-keeper Dragan Pantelic. In French terms, it's working — Bordeaux is atop the league — but S.V. Ham-burg, its German visitor, has mass-es of experience.

Still Pantelic is free to represent his team on Wednesday. So are dozens of Yugoslavs sprinkled across the continet, some Poles, Hungarians, Czechs and even the odd Russian. The difference between them and Frankfurt's Pahl and Nachtweih is that the former were all granted their freedom after lengthy service. The two East Germans grabbed it in their youth.

Speaking of youth, is it churlish to applaud out loud Qatar's 4-0 hammering by West Germany in the world Youth Cup final? Qatar, with a Gulf populace of 180,000 and a Brazilian coach, ousted the United States contemporally. United States controversially, England by force and Brazil acrimoni-

Dodgers Up Against It Again In the Core of the Big Apple

By Ross Newhan

Los Angeles Times Service NEW YORK — Amid the shouting and champagne in the Los Angeles Dodger clubhouse Monday, just after they had defeated Montreal to qualify for Tuesday night's World Series opener here, Manager Tom Lasorda raised his left arm triumphantly and bellowed into a TV microphone: "We can't wait to get to New York."

Obviously, times change. It was just three years ago that the Dodgers couldn't wait to get out of

They had just lost three in a row at Yankee Stadium, their 2-0 lead in the 1978 World Series having become a 3-2 deficit. The Yankees wrapped it up in the sixth game at Dodger Stadium, claiming their second straight world championship at the Dodgers' expense. But the losers did oot reward the Yankees with much respect.

Instead, they placed the hlame for a series of inept offensive and defensive efforts on the city of New York. The Big Apple? Rot-

Shortstop Bill Russell was the most outspoken. "With 56,000 screaming people," he said, "it's hard to concentrate. The fans unnerved us. They never let up on the transfer of the said of the said." you. They have oo courtesy at all. They're obnoxious. The worst."

Russell said everything about New York was the worst — fans, city, writers. "Of course if you live here long enough," he remarked, "I guess it's only natural that you become an ass." Yankee third baseman Graig Nettles reflected Mooday on the rationalizations that had come from all corners of the Dodger chibhouse. Speaking before the first pitch of the Dodgers' game in Montreal, he said: "I hope they get in it [the Series] again and I hope they react the same way.

"I don't ever want to see rowdy fans, but if the Dodgers are intimidated by the noise, the city and the stadium, that's one more thing in our favor."

Nettles said the Dodger alibis didn't bother him. The more things they find to think about, the better it is for us. The one aspect they seemed to forget that year that we came up to the last was that we came up to the last game with several injuries. Jun Spencer played first instead of Chris Chambliss. Brian Doyle played second instead of Willie Randolph. And Gary Thomasson played center instead of Mickey Rivers. We didn't even use our best team and we beat 'em." Said Ron Guidry, who won each of his starts against the Dodgers in the 1977 and '78 Series and who was to go at them Tuesday night with eight days' rest: "It didn't Guidry failed to go longer than 41/2 innings in either of two starts against the Brewers, but New York won both. The 5-11, 162-pounder was 11-5 with a 2.76 earned-run average during the regular season, when a complete game for him ammounted to six or seven innings' work. What Guidry started, either Rich Gossage or Ron Davis gener-

"Any time you have a pair of pitchers like that in the bullpen." Guidry said Monday, "you don't worry about nipping and tucking. You go as hard as you can for as long as you can. I pitched with that philosophy during the regular season and I'll go with it again

Rose Designated Athlete of Decade

NEW YORK - Pete Rose the Philadelphia Pbillies' record-setting first baseman, has been voted athlete of the decade by the American Caneer Society. The award, annouoced Monday, was voted by a panel of 300 sportswriters and broad-casters and took into account achievement for the years 1971-

In 1981, Rose broke Stan Musial's National League record for career hits - 3,630 - and, at 40, says he has oc intention of quitting.

"I hit .325 this year and led the majors in hits, so why talk about retirement? If you can still play the game and have fun, wby should you quit? The game is still fun for me," Rose

"I'm a lot better oow. The longer you're a hitter, the more you learn the pitchers, the bet-matter to me who we played — the Expos or Dodgers. They're both right-handed clubs [Guidry is left-handed]. But I can't imagine any lineup being any harder to beat than Milwaukee's, and we've already proved we can beat theirs."

Guidry feiled to be because Jackson has a muscle pull in his left calf, a decision wasn't to he made until he did some running just prior to the the lineup. Now, because Jackson has a muscle pull in his left calf, a decision wasn't to he made until he did some running just prior to the game. Were Jackson unable to play. Piniella was to start in right field against Jerry Reuss. Jackson's absence could be significant. He has proven that his presence is. Jackson has played for five world champion teams and has oever been on a Series loser. His lifetime Series average is .360: he has nine Series home runs and 23 runs batted in.

"When I'm finished," Mr. Octo-ber said Mooday, "the ooe thing I want them to say about me is that

Jackson's future as a Yankee may still be in doubt, but one of the strengths of this organization is that a commoo bond seems to enable it to rise above the controver-sies, fights and revolving-door

Both Jackson and Nettles have apologized to owner George Steinhrenner for their scuffle at the elub's victory party in Oak-

Past Tenseness

"It's in the past," Nettles said of the incident. "It's forgotten. We had an opportunity to talk things other. I'll be rooting for Reggie and I hope be'll be rooting for me.
"I told him that as sooo as it the scufflel was over I was sorry it happened. The thing that bothered me most is that some people said it was racial. It wasn't, I went to all the black players on the team and told them it wasn't. . . . In no way, no way at all, was it racial."

It is almost certain that Bob Lemon will return as manager in '82, the final year of the contract he signed in '78 when he replaced Billy Martin in midseason and led the Yankees back from a 14 game deficit.

Said Tommy John: "What Lem does is try to keep things in their simplest form. Some managers try to make this a complicated game. Lem says you pitch, you throw, you hit, you run, you catch — and if yon do them well, you win."

One thing Lemon would comment oo was that either the rested (but rusty?) Yankees or the high-flying (but emotionally spent?) Dodgers, pushed to the final out of the final inning of the final game of the National League season, might have an advantage.

"No matter what happens," Lemon said, "I'm sure the media will make it an issue, but I can't see it [the manner in which the two teams came up to the Series) being

NEW YORK - One day a gi-ant who lived in a castle in the sky dropped some magic seeds out the window. Upon waking next morning, he was astonished to see a huge beanstalk outside his window and upon looking down, he saw that the heanstalk was rooted far below in the earth. 'What do you make of that heanstalk?" the heanstalk?" the giant asked his wife at hreakfast. It's an open invitation for cat hurgiars to climb up here and steal the hen that lavs golden eggs," she

X said. Baker "I'll fix that." said the giant and took his pruning shears to the window.

Jack, having climbed heroically, had almost reached the window when he saw the giant lean out with the shears. Hold on there, frieno! I have a free toaster for you," he shouted to the giant.

The giant, who was a Reagan man, had already heard that there was no free lunch and believed it, and from that philosophical premise he had gone on to the conclusion that there were no free toasters either. Startled by seeing his philosophy confounded, he let Jack in the window and they fell into long conversation. Jack was his pocket calculator when the giant's wife interrupted.

"Why aren't you at the piano working on your new symphony?"

she asked the giant.
"There's more to life than writing symphonies," said the giant, "Do you realize we could be getting more than 12 percent interest, tax free up to $2,000, simply by letting a bank hold the hen's golden eggs for one year?"

"Plus this marvelous toaster absolutely free," said Jack. The giant's wife glared in disapproval. "Interest is for loan sharks, hankers and the Swiss," she told him.

To please his wife, the giant sent Jack back down the beanstalk and sat at the piano to wrestle with the theme for his largo movement, but he was unable to concentrate on the music, Each half-note he struck reminded him that half the profits

Next morning his wife discovered the hen was missing when she went for two eggs to boil for hreakfast. "Calm down," the giant said. "Jack has the whole week's supply of eggs in all-saver's account. supply of eggs in all-saver's ac-count and Ben is putting the hen in a tax shelter." The giant felt so good about high tax-free interest and tax dodges that he didn't work on his symphony all day, or the next day, or the next week. His wife was herating him for giving up his work when Ben dropped in via the

"Giving up the piano is the smartest thing you've done all week, hig fellow," Ben said, "In symphonies you gain from nothing with the new tax code. You need a new line of work." "My husband is an artist." said

"The Medicis are dead," Ben explained. "Art is no longer a gov-ernment-supported activity. If Michelangelo were living today he wouldn't be chipping marble. He'd be depreciating the quarry." On Ben's advice the giant gave up symphony writing and undertook a career at depreciating his hen. It was such lucrative work that he was able to afford six telephones and sat around the castle all day telephoning New York, Europe and Asia about the price of golden-egg layers and minute fluctuations in the interest rate.

One day between calls he wandered over to the piano and tried to "Chopsticks" but discovered he had forgotten the fingering. On a whim he decided to go down the beanstalk and take a few piano lessons. After descending, however, he found that all the piano teachers were tied up watching their money funds, and he started up the beanstalk, planning to purchase Vladimir Horowitz with his tax-free interest savings.

Months of sedentary telephone labor had left the giant so weakened that he faltered half a mile up the beanstalk and crashed fatally to earth. He has depreciated nicely ever since.

Nell Dunn's 'Steaming'

ONDON - "Steaming," the new comedy which is enjoying a successful run here, is unusual in several ways. Its leading characters are all women and since the play is set in a Turkish bath for much of the time they are unclothed. (The program, in addition to listing available Lon-don haths, credits Colgate Palmolive for the scap |. The women's state of undress is not only physical: as the play goes on they reveal their hang-ups, and dreams, often in words a lady isn't supposed to know. They also take dips in the real pool on stage which makes the play's author, Nell Dunn, feel contrite as she worries that they will catch cold. She also worries that the nudity and blue language might attract people for the wrong reasons. "I doo't know what I feel," Nell Dunn said in her house in Fulham. She is very nice, rather shy, with the restless look of a kid who might run off with the gypsies. "On the one hand I wanted it to be natural and daring and a celebration of the flesh. and at other times I get terribly anxious that it is being drooled over for the sake of drooling."

She needn't worry. The audience's reaction at the play's end makes it clear that they have caught the author's affectionate and celebratory mood.

Since her first book, "Up the Junction," in 1963, Nell Dunn has written about women in a unusually non-strident and warmbearted tone. "Steaming" will be called feminist hy some, but it isn't her word. "I'm not sure it's a feminist play," she said. "It's for women hut that doesn't make it feminist."

She is overcome with pleasure at having written her first play at 45 and was so excited on opening night that she could hardly be dragged offstage after her curtain call. She thinks "Steaming" is very much an imperfect first play: Before writing it she rarely went to the theater and didn't even know what a green room was. The only member of her family ever remotely connected with the theater was her grandfather, the Earl of Rosslyn, who took the vast Stoll Theatre for one night and hired Lillie Langury to play Ophelia to his writing novels anymore," she said. "I was sick of it. It got so introspective and lonely. Also, it seemed quite voyeurish, looking at people through a glass. I enjoyed it much more than writing a novel. I think it had to do with the same to have no people more sach having to have people meet each other. In my novels the characters go their way and don't

"I didn't like the isolation of

Chatter and Attitudes

Miss Dunn had been going to a steambath in Paddington and was fascinated by the women's chatter as well as by people's atti-tudes to pleasures of the flesh. "Intellectual pleasure is OK but physical pleasure is at its least bad lazy, at its worst something else. If you say you're reading Shakespeare in the afternoon people say fine. If you say you're spending the afternoon in a Turkish hath, that's wrong." Nell Dunn was born in London and convent-raised. "I had had dreams of being in the arts hul how to do it was a complete puzzle to me. It felt like looking out of the window and drawing what I saw when I wrote Up the Junction.'

"Up the Junction" came about after Nell and her then-husband, Jeremy Stanford, moved to the working-class area of Battersea in 1959. "I had gone to Battersea for reasons that had nothing to do with being a writer. I don't know what they had to do with.

It was warm and friendly, I liked the huildings which are all gone now. I wrote 'Up the Junction' because I was so delighted and

"'Never mind, Sylvie.' Sylvie pushed her blonde hair be-

A series of vignettes about such hawdy, anarchic characters as Ruhy, Sylvie and Fat Lil, "Up the Junction" still has warmth and vitality and humor after nearly 20 years. "Poor Cow," which followed, was an equal success and Nell Dunn is still friendly with its heroine who is also the hase for Josie, the lead-

Like thousands of others, Garvin Clemons is hooked on Ruhik's Cube. But, be's probably the only. Shannon, of Killen, Ala., a former radio engineer and unkerer. Conventional cubes are made up of smaller, movable plastic cubes of six different colors. Once the cube is twisted, the colors are mixed up. The trick is to manipulate the puz-zle until each side is a solid color. Clemons' cube has holes drilled in the small cubes to represent five of the colors. The sixth color blocks were kept smooth. Clemons, 47, has been blind for almost 10 years, the victim of a dynamite explosion on a construction job. Yet "I have to let my fingers and my hands do the looking for me," Clemons said.
